DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

A shooting in broad daylight near Boston's Prudential Center left a man dead and horrified the Back Bay community Tuesday morning.

According to Boston police, the shooting happened just before 11 a.m. near the upscale Colonnade Hotel, near the corner of Huntington Avenue and West Newton Street. Boston Police Commissioner William Gross said the victim, who was not identified but believed to have been in his 30s, was shot several times and died after he was transported to a hospital.

A suspect was arrested shortly after the shooting, on Ring Road, after witnesses called 911.

Phillip Foy, 34, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, is facing charges of murder, armed carjacking and unlawful possession of a firearm, police said.

The brazen shooting happened amid a bustling pedestrian area in the Back Bay, terrifying onlookers. Witness Kara Deyermenjian told Metro she was walking along Huntington Avenue when she saw police running by, guns drawn.

"I'm a little shaken up. It was scary," said Deyermenjian, 31, who said she saw police handcuff a man with long dreadlocks.

"Right in front of Star Market, they had him in custody. He was a tall guy, with dreads down to his waist," she said.

Deyermenjian said the man did not say anything as officers put him in a police car.

Another witness told her that he had seen the man throw a gun and some money onto the street, and attempt to flee in a cab. Police stopped him before he could get away. A Metro photographer at the scene saw a gun, a knife, an ammo clip, sneakers, cash and a necklace lying next to numbered evidence markers in the street.

Police blocked off the street to investigate the crime scene, snarling traffic in the area. Investigators were expected to remain at the crime scene into the Tuesday evening commute, so travelers were asked to avoid the area. The Orange Line also experienced delays due to the related police activity at Back Bay, according to the MBTA.

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh pointed to the rarity of daytime shootings in Boston, calling it "horrible and sad." Suffolk County District Attorney Rachael Rollins commended bystanders' swift reaction to the shooting. "We had good Samaritans that engaged in heroic behavior, [and] got the police involved."

Joshua promoter says Ruiz rematch clause triggered

2 Anthony Joshua will try to regain his lost heavyweight titles in a rematch with Mexican-American Andy Ruiz Jr. in November or December at a location to be decided, promoter Eddie Hearn said on Tuesday. Ruiz produced one of boxing's biggest upsets by beating the 29-year-old Briton with a seventh-round stoppage at New York's Madison Square Garden on Saturday. Joshua, previously undefeated and fighting for the first time in the United States, was defending his IBF, WBA and WBO titles but was knocked down four times in the fight. "We have today triggered the contracted rematch clause with Andy Ruiz Jr," Hearn said on Twitter. "The fight will take place in Nov/Dec at a venue to be confirmed shortly." Hearn told reporters after the fight that a rematch was a "must-win" for the 2012 Olympic super-heavyweight champion. REUTERS

Trump administration bans cruises to Cuba

3 The Trump administration on Tuesday imposed heavy new restrictions on U.S. travel to Cuba, including a ban on cruises, in a further bid to pressure the island's Communist government to reform and end its support for Venezuela's embattled President Nicolas Maduro. The tightening of the decades-old U.S. embargo on the Caribbean's largest island will further wound its crippled economy, as well as hurt U.S. travel companies that had built up business with Cuba during the brief 2014-2016 detente. The State Department said the United States will no longer permit visits to Cuba via passenger and recreational vessels, including cruise ships and yachts, as well as private and corporate aircraft. The country will also no longer allow so-called group people-to-people educational travel, one of the most popular exemptions to the overall ban on U.S. tourism to Cuba. REUTERS

Warren proposes $2 trillion 'green manufacturing' plan

4 Democratic U.S. presidential hopeful Elizabeth Warren proposed on Tuesday spending $2 trillion on a new "green manufacturing" program to address climate change that would invest in research and exporting American clean energy technology. The manufacturing program is the first in a new series of "economic patriotism" proposals Warren is unveiling intended to create American jobs and help U.S. industry. "This is going to be a big plan for bold structural changes," Warren said at a campaign rally in Detroit, Michigan. She said her proposal would be paid for in part by "all companies paying more taxes," singling out Amazon.com. Among the more than 20 Democrats in the field hoping to challenge Republican President Donald Trump in November 2020, Warren has distinguished herself as the most prolific proposer of new policy positions. Paul Manafort may be headed to Rikers Island

Sources said Trump's former campaign chairman may transfer to face state criminal charges.

REUTERS

Paul Manafort, President Donald Trump's former campaign chairman who was convicted of tax and bank fraud, may be transferred to Rikers Island jail in New York to face state criminal charges, a person familiar with the matter said.

Manafort, 70, is serving a combined sentence of 7-½ years in prison from two separate federal criminal cases, the longest term of anyone stemming from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. election.

The veteran Republican political operative, who was paid millions of dollars for his work for pro-Russian politicians in Ukraine, had been expected to be transferred to New York state custody in June, another person familiar with the matter said.

The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Defendants facing charges brought by the Manhattan district attorney are typically held at Rikers Island, a troubled jail complex that handles about 9,000 people a day, another city jail known as "the Tombs," or Bellevue hospital, if a defendant has a medical condition.

According to the New York City Department of Correction, a judge will decide whether he will be entering their custody.

A spokeswoman for the Manhattan district attorney's office did not immediately respond to requests for comment. A lawyer for Manafort did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Manafort was charged by prosecutors in New York in March with residential mortgage fraud and other felonies, as state lawmakers moved to ensure that he can be prosecuted even if he receives a presidential pardon from Trump. Presidents possess the power to issue pardons for federal crimes, not state crimes.

Prosecutors said the charges involved a scheme in which Manafort and others falsified records to obtain millions of dollars related to property loans. Manafort faces up to 25 years in prison on the three most serious charges in the latest indictment, residential mortgage fraud in the first degree. REUTERS

Ex-Trump lawyer Cohen 'loving' prison life, 'hates' the food

REUTERS

Michael Cohen, the convicted former personal lawyer to President Donald Trump, says he is making new friends in prison and enjoying time away from the spotlight, according to a person familiar with Cohen's first few weeks there.

"He's loving it there," the person told Reuters. "Peace, quiet. He wants to stay there. He's in the gym every day. He's loving life."

Cohen, 52, is housed in a minimum-security camp for white-collar criminals at Federal Correctional Institution in Otisville, New York, about 70 miles northwest of New York City.

The camp is known for its substantial population of Jewish inmates such as Cohen because of its proximity to Jewish enclaves in New York City and elsewhere in the state, employing a full-time rabbi and offering kosher meals.

The camp, which is not fenced in, also offers weights and other exercise equipment, a basketball court, a tennis area and a baseball field, and bocce ball.

The person familiar with Cohen's time in Otisville said that Cohen was relieved to be free of public attention and of the anxiety he felt before reporting to prison on May 6.

Lanny Davis, a spokesman for Cohen, did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Cohen, who is married with two children, once said he would "take a bullet" for Trump but then turned against him in court and in testimony to the U.S. Congress as investigations mounted into the 2016 Trump presidential campaign.

The former lawyer was sentenced in December to three years in prison for financial crimes and for orchestrating payments to pornographic film star Stormy Daniels and former Playboy model Karen McDougal shortly before the election. Cohen said Trump directed the "hush money" payments for the women's silence about their sexual relations with Trump.

Trump, who has denied the affairs, said he never directed Cohen to do anything illegal.

Cohen works on the prison's heating, ventilation and air-conditioning systems and he cut his hand on the job but did not need medical care, according to the person who spoke to Reuters.

Cohen "hates the food," the source said. "This is a guy who ate in all the best restaurants." REUTERS

The 'Deadwood' movie closes the casket on one of TV's most dangerous shows

The film premiered last Friday on HBO.

JAMES CASE
letters@metro.us

"Deadwood" contains all things. It is a western set in the camp of Deadwood, South Dakota, while it still operates in the murky gray area outside of U.S. jurisdiction in the 1870s. It is a political drama charting the rise from camp to town. It's a meditation on the nature of violence, abuse and addiction. It's a Shakespearean meditation on the human condition and how we choose to handle our suffering, where characters go on long soliloquies while mopping blood from floors. It's also a farce, as well as a satire. It's also a love story. It's a love letter to America and its roots as a frontier state. It's a critique of the consequences of entrepreneurial capitalism. It's also entirely physical, where there are long exchanges of characters simply watching each other go about their days or striding through the thoroughfare, about to act on a violent impulse. It's a costume drama with an ensemble cast containing the most complicated and esoteric dialogue that also is the bawdiest, curse-filled show in the history of television.

The themes and problems the characters have are universal. There is a powerful billionaire who comes to town and thinks the rules don't apply to him. "That goes on now in every town in America," the star, Ian McShane, who plays the unforgettable Gem Saloon proprietor Al Swearengen, said after the premiere last week. "It's about time."

And like all great stories, it is incredibly difficult to explain to someone without making a conversation into a lecture. And unfortunately, since "Deadwood" was produced between 2004 to 2006, it also carried the relic of a Bush-era consideration — the threat of cancellation. "Deadwood" had a strident, however limited, following during its run. This was still HBO in the mid-2000s. Prestige television was still a burgeoning concept and the end of "The Sopranos" was in sight — HBO needed to ensure it had a flagship program. "Deadwood," for all its strengths, was likely not it. The golden era of television was just beginning, its benefit of creative liberties not to be reaped by "Deadwood." That path had yet to be paved, and considerations such as audience size and trifling things such as money were far ahead of what is now a more commanding factor: prestige.

Here we are in 2019, and the era of nostalgia is at its nadir. The long-rumored, once-promised concept of a movie to tie up the considerable loose ends has come to fruition. But now, the landscape of prestige television is becoming rapidly similar to what contributed to the necrosis of mainstream film. There is an over-reliance of intellectual property stemming from franchises, reboots and adaptations with an overwhelming hope that they'll become "hits." A show with the subtleties and considerations of "Deadwood," with its drawn-out, long-form narration and focus on dialogue, couldn't possibly be created in 2019 — it can only be rebooted for a two-hour movie.

The movie is, like every episode of "Deadwood," completely fantastic. Loose ends from the original series are recalled and addressed. Redemption is either sought or articulated. Certain characters fall and other characters rise; each one continues to evolve. There is even a moment of titillating Marvel-style fan service. The show knows and loves its characters and the plot is intertwined with their emotions and arcs. The last scene and last line are nothing if not one of the most memorable moments in television history. However, the field is now exceptionally crowded. There are more shows on television than a human being could ever have time to watch, and more than plenty that require the type of considerate thoughtful viewing that "Deadwood" commands. Much like "The Sopranos," Deadwood isn't fit for binge-viewing.

So, the golden age of television is over. Program franchises like "Game of Thrones," which don't command the same type of viewership levels as network television programs 20 years ago, dominate the cultural zeitgeist. They are neither intellectually stimulating nor pure popcorn. The narrative choices and methods are neither safe nor challenging or experimental. If anything, the biggest "shows" are now brands, "media franchises" careful to be maintained and stay profitable. You can buy a Walter White action figure and "Game of Thrones" Monopoly.

The idea of a "Deadwood" reboot was the ultimate pipe dream that most assumed would never happen. Where can we go from here? We've come full circle. The "Deadwood" of yore returned for a gratifying final chapter, and the book is closed. The era of "safe television" continues on.

Godzilla: From radioactive colossus to unlikely climate hero

GETTY

Ever since Godzilla first rampaged across cinema screens 65 years ago, film critics have seen the reptilian antihero as a symbol of the fears gnawing away in the deepest recesses of moviegoers' minds.

With the giant lizard's return in "Godzilla: King of the Monsters," launched in cinemas at the weekend, reviewers are parsing the blockbuster for insights into the world's paralysis in the face of climate breakdown.

"It would be a mistake to dismiss 'Godzilla: King of the Monsters' as mindless pap or escapist fantasy," wrote anthropologist Nathaniel J. Dominy and biologist Ryan Calsbeek, both from Dartmouth, in the journal Science.

"What began as a pointed anti-nuclear fable has since evolved into a broader allegory for human folly and our reckless disregard for the natural environment."

Godzilla earned its reputation as a bellwether of collective anxiety soon after Japanese director Ishiro Honda first depicted the dinosaur-like creature in his 1954 film "Gojira" — a nickname derived from the Japanese words for gorilla and whale.

In Honda's film, a radioactive, 50-meter tall Godzilla lays waste to Tokyo after being awakened from the deep by underwater nuclear tests. Released barely a decade after atom bombs obliterated Nagasaki and Hiroshima, the film was a tacit reflection of Japan's shared wartime trauma.

In "King of the Monsters," directed by Michael Dougherty, an embittered former British army colonel, played by Charles Dance, believes modern civilization is on track to wipe out all life on the planet. The colonel and his paramilitary team go on a mission to release gargantuan mutant "Titans" from their resting places to try to tip the scales back into Earth's favor.

No longer the enemy who once delighted in toppling Japanese skyscrapers, Godzilla is cast as an unlikely eco-warrior battling to defeat the Titan menace — led by the three-headed King Ghidorah — and save humanity from itself.

Film critics say the devastating elemental forces unleashed by the Titans in the 35th Godzilla film hold up a mirror to real-world fears of wildfires, superstorms and floods caused by growing man-made instability in Earth's atmosphere.

"Dougherty's film recalls America's present-day anxieties over increasingly intense weather patterns tearing across the country from coast to coast," culture writer Andy Crump observed in a review in The Week.

INNER DEMONS

Although post-apocalyptic climate scenarios have been a staple of the "cli-fi" genre for years — notable examples include "The Day After Tomorrow" and "Mad Max: Fury Road" — Godzilla has returned against a uniquely febrile backdrop.

With hundreds of thousands of teen climate activists marching in cities across the world, and Extinction Rebellion bringing parts of London to a standstill in April, a new awareness of the crisis is seeping into mainstream culture.

While nobody pretends that a movie can directly deliver cuts in greenhouse gas emissions, fiction can serve as a vehicle to help communities face up to crises that might otherwise seem too overwhelming to contemplate.

"We need to engage with the reality of climate change in order to deal with it," said Caroline Hickman, a psychotherapist who lectures at the University of Bath in southwest England, and is a member of the Climate Psychology Alliance. "The monster gives us a metaphor, a narrative through which we can do that."

While the new Godzilla film has been panned in some quarters, Zhiwa Woodbury, author of a book on the psychology of the climate emergency, sees "King of the Monsters" as Hollywood's most profound "cli-fi" contribution to date.

By including a sequence where Godzilla is once more roused by an undersea nuclear blast, Woodbury says the film is asking audiences to heal the rupture in mankind's relationship with the natural world that occurred at the dawn of the atomic age.

"Godzilla is spot-on in asking us to face our inner demons," Woodbury wrote on his EcoPsychology NOW! blog. "Only then can we hope to rise like a phoenix from the ashes of the petrochemical age, and regenerate our world on a path of climate recovery." REUTERS

The Bruins could use some old-school Brad Marchand in Game 5 Thursday night.

GETTY IMAGES

B's need to show muscle in Game 5

Several key members of the Bruins are on the shelf.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Blues aren't going down without a fight — or at least a cheap shot or two.

The 2019 Stanley Cup Final is tied, 2-2, as the series heads back to Causeway Street, and the Bruins certainly need to re-establish the physical edge that they had over St. Louis way back in Game 1.

The Blues are not only "gooning" it up more than the B's are in this series, but on the surface the Bruins look like the softer team right now.

The Bruins are currently down two top six defensemen as captain Zdeno Chara and Matt Grzelcyk are both highly questionable for Game 5 at the Garden. Chara and Grzelcyk's injuries are both all too real (Chara's unlucky meeting with the puck left him a bloody mess in Game 4) and there's nothing either of them could do about getting injured. But the momentum of the physicality aspect of this series is clearly in favor of St. Louis at the moment.

That can change with one Torey Krug missile hit on Thursday night (8 p.m., NBC), but something of the like needs to happen for the Bruins.

The B's could also use some old-school Brad Marchand irritation, as the "Little Ball of Hate" has been relatively quiet this postseason when it comes to getting under other teams' skin. Punching people in the back of the head when they're not looking isn't advised, but it would be nice to see Marchand put certain members of the Blues on notice.

A tall order

The Bruins have dealt with injuries incredibly well all season long, and we've already seen them grab a key win this postseason without their 6-foot-9 leader in Chara (a 4-0 win in Game 4 of the Eastern Conference Finals over Carolina).

Chara's status for Game 5 is still up in the air.

"He got a puck in the face. Very uncomfortable. He was advised not to return to play [in Game 4]. He had some stitches," Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy said. "Probably some dental work in the near future. He wanted to come out on the bench and be with his teammates. That's why he was out there. I don't know his status for Game 5."

Cassidy hinted that the Bruins could potentially go with seven defensemen in Game 5 to make up for the losses of Chara and Grzelcyk.

The B's could insert veteran Steve Kampfer and/or rookies Urho Vaakanainen, Jeremy Lauzon and Jakub Zboril.

"We'd have to look at Kampfer first," Cassidy said. "He's been the one playing in the playoffs. But [Chara] is another left stick, so we may measure that as well."

Schedule

Game 5: Thursday, June 6, at Boston (8 p.m., NBC)

Game 6: Sunday, June 9, at St. Louis (8 p.m., NBC)

Game 7: Wednesday, June 12, at Boston (8 p.m., NBC)

*If necessary

Hockey socialism

Like the Bruins, the Blues have not relied on just one or two stars to provide their offense this postseason.

St. Louis has scored 11 goals so far in the Cup Final, with seven different players having lit the lamp. Here are the players that have scored the goals thus far for the Blues:

V. Tarasenko (3)
Brayden Schenn (2)
Ivan Barbashev
Robert Bortuzzo
Carl Gunnarsson
Colton Parayko

Forcing the Blues to spread the wealth has proven to be the correct strategy for the Bruins through four games of the Cup Final, though the defense needs to limit the amount of shots St. Louis gets on net in Game 5 if they hope to emerge victorious. In both losses this series, the Bruins allowed the Blues to get 37 shots on Tuukka Rask.

Conversely, in the Game 1 win (4-2) St. Louis only had 20 shots on Rask, and in the Game 3 victory (7-2) it only registered 29 shots on goal.

Aries You are best off being an observer, not a participant. If you get involved in a discussion or someone else's battle, prepare to suffer an emotional, financial or physical loss.

Taurus Speak up and make things happen. An aggressive approach will get the results you want with the least amount of interference. Personal gains and improvements are favored.

Gemini You will have plenty of options regarding money, legal and medical matters, but choosing what's best will require research. Avoid shortcuts, and don't rely on someone's say-so.

Cancer Let your heart lead the way. If you observe what others do, you will know exactly how to respond. Partnership issues can be resolved if you discuss your intentions and plans.

Leo Look at every possibility. Don't feel pressured by others' actions. Sit tight and watch things unfold. If you are patient, you'll know what to do when the time is right.

Virgo A personal change will help you engage in situations that you may have shied away from in the past. Trust in your ability to get things done, not in what others promise to do.

Libra An open mind can be an asset, as long as you don't let someone lead you to believe that you aren't qualified or good enough to do your own thing.

Scorpio Take pride in what and who you know. Discussions will help clear up any misconception you may have about someone. Personal relationships will flourish if you express your feelings. Travel is favored.

Sagittarius Rely on what's tangible, not on what someone is trying to convince you to believe. Partnerships will need to be handled carefully if money is involved. Moderation is encouraged.

Capricorn You have more wiggle room than you think. Proceed with the changes you want to make, and don't forget to spend time with a loved one.

Aquarius Choose your actions and compatriots based on how you feel and what's best for you. If something doesn't feel right, take a pass.

Pisces Take any opportunity you get to express your thoughts, feelings and intentions. Build a solid platform for whatever you want to pursue, and make your dreams come true. EUGENIA LAST
